

This study will employ a mixed-mode for collection of surveys, utilizing both an online survey hosted by Qualtrics and a paper-based survey method for when online completion of the survey is not ideal. Respondents will have an option to return the survey anonymously via mail. Data received from this survey will assist public relations researchers by gaining an understanding of EOR and DEIB in Naval officers from traditionally marginalized communities as well as advance employee-organization relationship theory.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Title; Associated Form; and OMB Number: Challenges of Operational Environments Study; OMB Control Number: 0703-COPE.

Needs and Uses: The Challenges of Operational Environments Study is a longitudinal study that will assess stressors associated with different operational environments and their effect on mental and behavioral health. Because the operational environment of the Commands involved will change over time, the survey that is being submitted for approval has been designed to adapt similarly. The base survey will remain the same at every time point, while separate modules will be added according to a pre-determined phases (i.e., maintenance period, sea trials, homeport shift, deployment, and post-deployment). Because the crew of the ships will change over time and participation is voluntary, some respondents may complete the survey at multiple time points, whereas others may complete it just once.

Affected Public: Individuals or households.
