

previously-allowed revised estimates when an individual shipper tenders more goods or requests additional service. The final rule also allowed motor carriers to provide a virtual survey and removed the 50-mile radius for when a survey is required, removed the requirement for an order for service and incorporated that document into the bill of lading, and made other minor updates to increase the clarity of the regulations. These changes were intended to reduce the paperwork burden on household goods motor carriers and reduce confusion for individual shippers.

The complete information collection required by the referenced final rules assists household goods shippers in their business dealings with interstate household goods motor carriers. The information collected is used by prospective household goods shippers to make informed decisions about contracts and services ordered, executed, and settled. The household goods motor carrier is often the final contact for individual shippers and is in the best position to educate and assist household goods shippers during their move. The regulations are intended to combat deceptive business practices by requiring household goods motor carriers to conduct physical surveys of shippers' items to be transported unless waived in writing by the shipper and to combat deceptive business practices by requiring the household goods motor carrier to prepare an inventory of the goods shipped and a bill of lading for each shipment. The regulations also require motor carriers to obtain weight tickets for each shipment, to generate and maintain additional documents associated with the status of shipment delays and to furnish shippers, upon request, the records of contact regarding delays, and to keep written or electronic records of all complaints received from shippers. They help enforcement personnel better protect consumers by verifying that shippers are receiving information as required by regulations. The information collection itself does not impose these requirements independently. It supports compliance with the regulatory provisions under 49 CFR part 375. The documents and records that household goods motor carriers must maintain and, in some cases, furnish—such as inventories, bill of lading, and weight tickets—are necessary to demonstrate that they are meeting regulatory obligations. This collection enables FMCSA and consumers to verify adherence to consumer protection standards and helps facilitate enforcement. There is an information collection associated with the regulations because FMCSA requires household goods motor carriers to keep records and provide documents.

FMCSA revises the total annual burden to 3,722,704 hours. This is an increase of 14,609 annual burden hours from the currently approved 3,708,095 burden hours estimate. The increase is due to Agency estimates of the number of active household goods motor carriers subject to the information collection requirements.

Public Comments Invited: You are asked to comment on any aspect of this information collection, including: (1) whether the proposed collection is necessary for the performance of FMCSA's functions; (2) the accuracy of the estimated burden; (3) ways for FMCSA to enhance the quality, usefulness, and clarity of the collected information; and (4) ways that the burden could be minimized without reducing the quality of the collected information.

Issued under the authority of 49 CFR 1.87.

Acting Associate Administrator, Office of Research and Registration.
