

building, and preparedness and response capabilities by fostering a shared understanding of Sector risks, needs, and opportunities.

SRMAs are expected to determine the extent to which their respective sectors are implementing infrastructure protection frameworks and guidance (e.g., cybersecurity). Per the 2013 National Infrastructure Protection Plan (NIPP), they “serve as a day-to-day Federal interface for the dynamic prioritization and coordination of sector-specific activities and carry out incident management responsibilities”. CIP’s success as the SRMA depends heavily on routine and ad hoc data to inform its programs and activities in the HPH Sector.

CIP plans to collect data bi-annually to understand the impact of the HPH Partnership’s work on HPH Sector resilience. Using survey-based data collection tools, CIP will measure the performance of the HPH Partnership as a program and use the resulting information to assess the Office’s responsiveness to its statutory responsibilities, including those articulated in Section 2009(b) in the 2021 NDAA. The data will additionally support CIP’s ability to improve programmatic operations and inform decision-making. CIP will also collect data under urgent circumstances to guide emergency response activities and after-action reporting for the HPH Sector.
