

long-term adverse ecosystem impacts. Long-term adverse ecosystem impacts means an impact that persists after the project has concluded that alters or disrupts ecosystem functioning, such as modifying species behavioral patterns or altering habitat functions. The Administrative Record to this CE presents a non-exhaustive list of available resources on BMPs and peer-reviewed scientifically accepted methods that apply to many of the activities encompassed by this CE.”

E4: Updates to Aquaculture Research Actions

The proposed edits to the aquaculture research CE, E8, would reduce unnecessary administrative burden for aquaculture activities with no potential for significant impacts to the human environment, reduce uncertainty, increase efficiency, and ensure compliance with NEPA. This CE would be limited to research activities conducted at land-based facilities and does not extend to operations of the facility that are independent of research activities. The scope of this CE would not extend to aquaculture farms or aquaculture research sites operating in marine or coastal waters.

The proposed text is as follows: “E4: Biological, chemical, food production, ecological, or toxicological research conducted in an established, land-based mesocosm or aquaculture facility (e.g., recirculating aquaculture system, biofloc system, hatchery) that employs recommended protocols providing for containment and disposal of waste, chemicals, toxins, non-native species, etc., in compliance with established Federal and state regulatory guidelines, and best management practices.”

NOAA requests comments from the public on its proposed revisions to existing CEs and new CEs. NOAA also invites comment on the substantiation record and supporting materials it has prepared to substantiate this proposal. The agency will consider input from the public and consult with CEQ for a conformity determination before finalizing its proposal.
