

taking the survey. However, the Military Equal Opportunity (MEO) workforce receives fewer than 2,000 SH complaints annually. Prevalence rates for other forms of harassment—including hazing, bullying, and incidents based on race and sexual orientation—are not assessed as frequently. However, Service members experiencing all forms of harassment could benefit from support services. Any approach to address harassment within DoD will require a significant commitment of resources. Existing academic literature, data analytics, and research studies cannot serve as a complete guide for determining the ramifications of addressing these important changes. The Independent Review Commission on Sexual Assault in the Military (IRC) found the Military Departments' response to SH complaints from Service members is inconsistent and fails to render proper assistance. Specifically, DoD's approach to SH is fractured across several components and should be addressed in direct coordination with sexual assault prevention and response (SAPR) policies to reflect the established continuum of harm, namely that from sexual harassment to sexual assault. The IRC's cross-cutting recommendation 1 prescribed a stop gap measure to support SH victims with appropriate SAPR services while the Department undertakes a review of all policies and structures tasked with addressing elements of the military's SH response. More broadly, DoD Instruction 1020.03 requires harassment prevention and response policies to address a wide range of misconduct, but does not specify what kinds of response services, care, and support are appropriate for Service members reporting harassment. This project will examine how DoD can best provide harassment response services to Service members.
