SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Background

The Nation's Marine Transportation System (MTS) is a core component of the United States' economic and national security. While it has proven to be strong and resilient, the MTS faces many challenges to its future success. Among these challenges are aging infrastructure, declining public sector investment, landside congestion, increased environmental sensitivity, a projected 25 percent growth in population over the next 35 years, and general lack of awareness by the public and key policy makers of the importance of the MTS to the Nation's prosperity and security. These factors have a cumulative impact on U.S. deep water and inland ports, domestic cargo shipping (between U.S. ports in coastwise trade, on the Great Lakes and inland rivers and waterways, and between the mainland and non-contiguous U.S. territories), on U.S. shipyards, on off-shore energy development, and on the MTS' ability to meet environmental sustainability requirements. In January, MARAD hosted a multi-day public meeting focused on cargo opportunities and sealift capacity, with an overall objective of increasing the number of U.S.-flag ships operating in international trade. The purpose of the public MARAD/MTSNAC meeting in May is to identify domestic maritime opportunities that can be incorporated into a National Maritime Strategy to guide public and private Marine Transportation activities into the future. The results of this second symposium will be considered along with those from the January 2014 symposium to help shape the National Maritime Strategy being developed by MARAD. The principal focus areas will include the following:

1. All U.S. Ports, which includes the fifty States, District of Columbia, Guam, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Northern Mariana Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States.

2. Domestic Shipping: All cargoes moving between U.S. ports and off-shore platforms by tugs and barges, ships, and other vessels along the coasts, between contiguous and non-contiguous U.S. ports, on inland rivers, waterways, and the Great Lakes.

3. U.S. Shipyards: Includes all aspects of the industrial base used in the construction, modification, repair, and disposal of cargo-carrying ships, tugs, towboats, and barges for domestic, off-shore, and international U.S. flag trade.

In addition, the following two cross-cutting themes will be addressed in the context of the above three areas:

1. Environmental Compliance and Maritime Energy Use: Compliance with existing and future environmental requirements, and the related topic of vessel energy use for propulsion and in-port electrical power.

2. Labor: All labor issues as they relate to the above three topic areas.

Suggestions from the public for proposals and agenda topics relating to the above domestic maritime topic areas are being solicited by the Maritime Administration for inclusion on the public meeting's agenda and may be submitted to MARAD docket number MARAD-2014-0044. The meeting agenda will be published on the MARAD Web site at a later date, after consideration of responses received in the docket.
