SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Title of Collection: Generic Clearance for Information Collection Using Voluntary Surveys for Studies Conducted by the Federal Trade Commission Bureau of Economics to Support the FTC's Missions to Protect Consumers and Competition.

OMB Control Number: 3084-XXXX.

Type of Review: Proposed Collection.

Estimated Annual Burden Hours: 10,000 hours.

Abstract: Understanding consumers' perceptions and behaviors plays an important role in improving FTC law enforcement by better understanding potentially harmful and anticompetitive business practices and enabling efficient new methods to compute consumer injury. The FTC seeks to collect data using voluntary participation in surveys under this generic clearance to help with determining the issues and mechanisms underlying consumer behavior in response to unfair or deceptive business practices and to inform the FTC about how best to protect consumers in light of these practices. Data collected under this generic clearance may also be useful for monitoring emerging trends in deceptive and unfair practices in the marketplace and to understand the effectiveness of FTC's enforcement actions and consumer education efforts.

The Federal Trade Commission Act (the Act), 15 U.S.C. 41 through 58, authorizes the agency to conduct research and gather information on issues related to consumer protection and competition. Specifically, section 6(a) of the Act, 15 U.S.C. 46(a) provides the Commission shall have power "to gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices, and management of any person, partnership, or corporation engaged in or whose business affects commerce." Accordingly, this generic clearance seeks to cover research consisting of voluntary focus groups, interviews, surveys, and experiments relating to consumers' perceptions of industry and business practices, and their behavior as it pertains to their relationship with these practices.

The information will be collected from voluntary participants through one-on-one telephone, internet, or in-person interviews, online focus groups, self-administered (online) surveys, or (online or in-person) economics experiments, depending upon the target audience, expectations about whether the information will be evaluated in an individual or group context, and the need to present educational or interventional materials. The methods to be used serve the narrowly defined need for direct and informal opinion on a specific topic and as qualitative and quantitative research tools, and have two major purposes:

1. Increase understanding of consumers' perceptions and behavioral responses to potentially harmful business practices.
2. To stay current on the latest trends in consumer experience with deceptive, unfair, or anticompetitive practices in the marketplace.

The FTC will use this information to better understand where to dedicate resources in investigation and enforcement, as well as to improve methods for assessing consumer harm and demand estimation. The research conducted under this voluntary information collection falls primarily under the Bureau of Economics within the FTC. However, other Bureaus or Offices within the FTC may offer advice and input into the research conducted. The research would not be used specifically for the purposes of making policy or regulatory decisions. Rather, the findings would help expand the agency's knowledge and understanding of consumer perception issues prevalent in its law-enforcement investigations. The FTC's Bureau of Economics will use this voluntary information collection to test communications and social and behavioral methods about consumer behavior and beliefs in ways that increase our understanding of consumer experiences as well as ways in which business practices may be or have the potential to be, inflicting harm on consumers. For one example, the FTC intends to use this information collection to conduct a voluntary survey of American consumers about their experiences of fraud in the marketplace.

As required by section 3506(c)(2)(A) of the PRA, 44 U.S.C. 3506(c)(2)(A), the FTC is providing this opportunity for public comment.

Burden statement: Annually, the FTC projects about 10 social and behavioral studies, involving voluntary respondents, using the variety of test
