SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:I. Background

A retinal prosthesis is a visual prosthetic device, implanted on or beneath the retina or on the outer surface of the globe, that uses electrical stimulation to provide some level of visual stimulation for persons suffering from degenerative retinal conditions. This draft guidance helps device manufacturers submit an IDE to FDA so that they may conduct feasibility and/or pivotal human clinical trials of their retinal prostheses in the United States in order to support a premarket approval application (PMA). The draft guidance provides recommendations about pre-clinical and clinical tests of retinal prosthetic devices. The draft guidance does not apply to prostheses that stimulate the optic nerve or other higher brain areas such as the visual cortex or the lateral geniculate nucleus.

II. Significance of Guidance

This draft guidance is being issued consistent with FDA's good guidance practices regulation (21 CFR 10.115). The draft guidance, when finalized will represent the agency's current thinking on investigational device exemption (IDE) applications for retinal prostheses. It does not create or confer any rights for or on any person and does not operate to bind FDA or the public. An alternative approach may be used if such approach satisfies the requirements of the applicable statute and regulations.

III. Electronic Access
