Synopsis

In document DA 11-661, the Bureau seeks input on the information necessary for consumers to make informed choices among competing broadband Internet access services. In particular, document DA 11-661 seeks comment about the speed and performance required for the range of Internet applications consumers intend to use, and how to communicate that information to consumers. According to data collected by the Commission, many consumers lack information about their connection's performance and its ability to support different services and activities online. The lack of such information hampers consumers' ability to compare tiers of service offered by and among providers.

Consumers rely on Internet-based applications and services that place a wide range of demands on broadband network, and consumers' experiences can be impacted by a broadband service's speed, latency, and jitter. Document DA 11-661 seeks input on the information that is most useful to consumers assessing which broadband service to purchase. This is part of the Commission's ongoing effort to ensure that consumers have access to the information they need about the communications services they purchase and use.

The Bureau seeks comment on the service characteristics that consumers need to consider to determine broadband performance requirements and the most effective way to ensure consumers are informed about their broadband performance needs.

Federal Communications Commission.

Mark Stone,

Deputy Chief, Consumer and Governmental Affairs Bureau.
