Background and Purpose

In 1994, the U.S. Coast Guard (USCG), the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), the Research and Special Programs Administration (RSPA), and the Minerals Management Service (MMS) coordinated the development of the National Preparedness for Response Exercise Program (PREP) Guidelines. Through a series of public workshops involving representatives from many State governments, the regulated community, environmental interest groups, and the general public, the PREP Guidelines were crafted to reflect the consensus agreement of the entire oil spill response community regarding an appropriate exercise program, including exercise types, frequency, scope, and objectives. For their part, USCG, EPA, RSPA, and MMS agreed that while the PREP Guidelines are not regulatory, each agency would accept that an industry entity following the PREP Guidelines would be in compliance with the pollution response exercise requirements in 33 U.S.C. 1321(j). (For Coast Guard rules, see 33 CFR 154.1055(f) and 33 CFR 155.1060(h); for EPA rules, see 40 CFR 112.21; for RSPA rules, see 49 CFR 194; or for MMS rules, see 30 CFR 254).

Since 1994, USCG, EPA, RSPA, and MMS have hosted public workshops in 1995, 1997, and 2000, to review the PREP Guidelines and consider need for changes. The first two workshops endorsed preserving the 1994 PREP Guidelines without amendment. The 2000 workshop recommended consideration of amending the PREP Guidelines to clarify or amend certain exercise parameters and standards.
