Abstract of Information Available

Human remains representing, at least, one individual have been identified. The 13 associated funerary objects are one worked stone, one stone tool, nine dentalia, one lot of sagebrush twine, and one lot of worked sagebrush bark. The fragmentary human remains (catalogued as 11-50, Accession 100AT) are from a female adult, estimated to have been 30-35 years of age. The human remains and associated funerary objects were transferred to the Museum by a private individual in 1936. No information concerning direct association or provenience was found, but "Fort Rock Cave?" was written on the accessions record at a later date. This is consistent with the donor's known collecting area. According to the accessions records, the artifacts were most likely recovered in association with the burial. Fort Rock Cave is in the historic territory of Northern Paiute peoples.

Human remains representing, at least, two individuals have been identified. There are no associated funerary objects present. The human remains (catalogued as 11-308, Accession 136) are from two adults, one male estimated to have been 20-35 years of age and one female of unknown age. The human remains were removed by a private individual from the Fort Rock area of Lake County, Oregon, in 1948, and transferred to the Museum in 1953. According to Museum records, the remains were removed from "Fort Rock 5 miles east of Fort Rock village on Lake Road, then 1 mile south . . ." The human remains were noted as being exposed at the site. The Fort Rock area
