

individual who was a former employee when the alleged personnel action and disclosure occurred could not bring a claim under the WPA); Guzman v. Office of Personnel Management, 53 F. App'x 927 (Fed. Cir. 2002) (per curiam) (construing the language of sections 1221(a) and 2302(b)(8) as permitting a former employee to bring a claim under the WPA "only as to disclosures made . . . during the period that the complainant was an employee or applicant"); Amarille v. Office of Personnel Management, 28 F. App'x 931 (Fed. Cir. 2001) (concluding that the Board lacked jurisdiction over an IRA appeal filed by a former employee because, during the relevant time in question, he was neither an employee nor applicant for Federal employment). The Board may follow the Federal Circuit's nonprecedential decisions, to the extent that the Board finds them persuasive.

The Board, prior to the WPEA's enactment, also issued decisions ruling on the question being examined here. See Weed v. Social Security Administration, 113 M.S.P.R. 221 (2010) (finding that the appellant, who was working for the Federal Government when he filed his Office of Special Counsel complaint and when the personnel actions in dispute took place, was an "employee" protected by the statute, even though he was working at a different Federal agency than the one that took the personnel actions; alternatively, finding that a whistleblower need not be "an employee, an applicant for employment or a former employee at the time he made his protected disclosures"); Pasley v. Department of the Treasury, 109 M.S.P.R. 105 (2008) (concluding that the termination of a former Federal employee by a private sector employer taken in retaliation for his protected disclosures during Federal Government employment did not meet the definition of a "personnel action" under the WPA); Greenup v. Department of Agriculture, 106 M.S.P.R. 202 (2007) (determining that the appellant lacked standing to challenge personnel actions taken against her while she was a county employee, but that she later was covered by the WPA after she resigned from her county job and applied, but was not selected, for a Federal position).

In light of the relevant statutory language, it could be argued that an individual seeking protection under the WPA and WPEA must have been either an employee or an applicant at the time of both the disclosure and the subject matter of the disclosure. Adkins v. Office of Personnel Management, 104 M.S.P.R. 233 (2006) (reasoning that, where the language of a statute is clear, it controls, absent an express indication of an intent to the contrary), aff'd, 525 F.3d 1363 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

In analyzing this question, the Board also wishes to receive comments that substantively compare and contrast the statutory language in the WPA and WPEA regarding the standing of individuals who are "employees," "former employees," and "applicants for employment," with the analogous, yet more expansive, standing requirement language under the Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act of 1994 (codified at 38 U.S.C. 4301–4333) which provides, in relevant part, that "a person may submit a complaint against a Federal executive agency or the Office," 38 U.S.C. 4324(b) (emphasis added); see Silva v. Department of Homeland Security, 112 M.S.P.R. 362 (2009).

Finally, the Board is seeking comments that address what, if any, effect the question presented here might have on other Federal whistleblower and anti-retaliation laws. This would include the Department of Defense Authorization Act of 1987, which specifically bans defense contractors and subcontractors from retaliating against employees in reprisal for disclosing to specified entities information about alleged gross mismanagement or a substantial and specific danger to public health or safety. See 10 U.S.C. 2409(a). Interested individuals or organizations may submit amicus briefs or other comments on the question presented in Abernathy no later than February 9, 2016. Amicus briefs must be filed with the Clerk of the Board. Briefs shall not exceed 30 pages in length. The text shall be double-spaced, except for quotations and footnotes, and the briefs shall be on 8 1/2 by 11 inch paper with one inch margins on all four sides. All amicus briefs received will be posted on the Board's public Web site at www.mspb.gov/SignificantCases after February 9, 2016.

William D. Spencer,
Clerk of the Board.
