

undermine existing campus processes. Stakeholders also stated that these provisions could increase institutional costs as a result of increased litigation and prompt institutions to change their approach to litigation, such as being more likely to settle. In the case of private institutions, the Department has heard concerns that the regulations may incentivize private colleges to limit, eliminate, or reconsider their policies on free speech for fear of losing grant funds. Some stakeholders indicated support for these provisions and stated that the regulation helps secure crucial civil liberties under the First Amendment.

III. Solicitation of Comments: Impact of 34 CFR 75.500 and 76.500, Paragraphs (b) and (c)

The Biden-Harris Administration deeply values the First Amendment, including its guarantees of free speech and free exercise. The Department is seeking input from the public on how the regulations have affected or are reasonably expected to affect decisions surrounding First Amendment and free speech-related litigation in Federal and State court and institutional policies on freedom of speech. The Department is interested in this public input to inform its review of the current regulations and its implementation of applicable grant programs. This effort is separate from any ongoing regulatory work. The deadline for these submissions is March 24, 2023.

The Department encourages comments from impacted institutions of higher education; researchers, academics, policy experts, and other individuals familiar with First Amendment rights and institutional policies; organizations that work on First Amendment issues, including those that work directly with institutions and students; students and other members of the public.

The Department seeks responses to the specific questions below, as well as the general concepts and topics identified as they relate to First Amendment rights and free speech policies on campus.

The Department invites comments as to:

1. Whether and how the current regulations have affected or are reasonably expected to affect decisions surrounding First Amendment and free speech-related litigation in Federal and State court;

2. How these regulations have affected or are reasonably expected to affect public IHEs' approach to designing institutional policies related to First Amendment protections, including on-campuses processes used to address alleged free speech and academic freedom violations;

3. How these regulations have affected or are reasonably expected to affect private IHEs' approach to designing institutional policies related to free speech and academic freedom, including on-campus processes used to address alleged free speech and academic freedom violations;

4. Whether and how these grant conditions have provided additional protections of First Amendment rights in the case of public colleges, or promotion of free speech and free inquiry policies in the case of private institutions;

5. Whether these regulations affect or could be expected to affect how aggrieved campus community members seek resolution to alleged free speech and academic freedom policy violations;

6. Whether these regulations have resulted in additional quantifiable costs beyond what was considered in the 2020 final rule;

7. Any other information that the public believes would inform the Department's understanding of the impact of these regulations.

Center on Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics for Young Children with Disabilities.

Background:

One of the greatest joys of early learning is the amazing curiosity of infants, toddlers, and preschool children (young children). All young children are “little scientists” who make observations and conduct experiments to see what will happen as they play and engage with their environment and with each other. In fact, more than half of young children's natural playtime is spent on a science or mathematics-related activity (Head Start Early Childhood Learning and Knowledge Center, 2021a). For example, infants explore objects with their hands and mouth, learning about similarities and differences; during outdoor free play, preschoolers like to explore and naturally learn math concepts such as counting or sorting leaves and rocks. This sets the earliest foundation for school readiness (National Center on Early Childhood Development, Teaching, and Learning, 2021a), and allows young children to engage and communicate with others as they develop skills and learn new concepts.
